So long but not farewell

Principal Morton to head up institute

by Kevin Sager

Desmond Morton, Principal of Erindale College since 1986, has announced that he is taking an extended leave of absence in order to serve as director of the new McGill University Institute for the Study of Canada in Montreal. Funded largely by Charles Bronfman, the institute is intended to promote a better understanding of Canada and improve the field of Canadian Studies.

Why have you chosen to leave Erindale now?

Because I got an invitation I didn't think I could refuse. After 8 years of being Principal, an offer came from McGill to be the first director and help set up an institute for the study of Canada. I will be the first director of a new institute that seems to have a very broad mandate and a very challenging one. It seemed that this was the kind of invitation that I couldn't easily turn down.

The country is obviously undergoing considerable stress. The one factor in that stress is that I think a great many Canadians, who know a great deal about a great many things, have not perhaps had much incentive or encouragement or opportunity to learn as much as they should about how this country itself works. I hope that's a central core function of this institute. It's also hoping to improve the awareness of Canada within Quebec, and of Quebec issues within Canada, as well as native concerns vis a vis the rest of the country, and vice versa.

What would you consider your favourite moments at Erindale?

There's so many of them, and selecting one becomes immediately embarrassing. The evenings I've spent with ECSU, ECARA, the Residence Dons, talking about the place, learning more about their concerns, problems, achievements, and hopes.

Erindale Principal says goodbye for now

Those are very warm memories for me, moments of achievement, such as when we managed to complete the base for the Kancff center, the fundraising campaign. When I have managed to make a point in the university that our business here is excellence in undergraduate education.

The greatest virtue of this job is that it's infinitely varied, and I've never had a moment when I haven't been enjoying myself. When I look back on my life, I've generally enjoyed myself. That's why I've never turned down a challenge. I've always felt that somewhere around the next corner, there will be more interesting, exciting things to do. And also some pain, and suffering, and difficult moments. But those are part of life too, and they can make you grow.

What would you say have been the low points of your time at Erindale?

When the university has presented us with significant budget cuts, and we've had to cancel or delay our plans. That's happened so often, it's practically an annual event. I remember the year we didn't have a budget cut; they gave us one anyway to keep us in practise.

Those are painful moments not because we didn't or couldn't make changes, but because the first requirement was to meet the demands of the university.

Those are trying, exasperating moments, because you build towards an achievement, and you see the funding for it knocked off so that some external will be met. That's part of life, but it's not a pleasant part of life.

What are you going to miss most about Erindale?

I'm going to miss the people here. Students, faculty, and I guess especially the staff, because I think the staff are often ignored in the university- not at Erindale, because they are central to everything we do here.

I'm going to miss the people, and that's why I'm going to come back.

What advice would you give to your successor and to the college in general?

I'm not sure the advice of an outgoing Principal is taken all that seriously but I think obviously I would like to build on the strengths we've achieved, not because of my role, but because we inherited them. This is a college with very good links to the community. It's important to us that we're part of the U of T; it gives us a world, certainly a national stature, and it makes it much easier to attract good students and good faculty. We wouldn't have much for them here to do if we didn't have tremendous community support.

It takes a lot of time, and it takes a certain amount of patience, and a considerable understanding. That is one of Erindale's strengths, and it's a strength we contribute to the University.

I think the other thing, is that we adopted a mission statement in 1977; excellence in undergraduate education. It's a tough mission; it's not a popular one with many people in the university.

Are there any projects or programs above all others that you would like to see to their fruition?

Yes, obviously we've set our hand to building a student centre, for a lot of good reasons. I think we're in good shape to announce it, it's been delayed because of the recession. But I'm determined, and was determined before I took this job, to make sure it gets launched. It's going to take a lot of work, and a lot of people. I think it can be done. It's a place where students will grow and remember.

When did McGill approach you to take on this position?

I was aware of the Bronfman generosity and the existence of the institute, and somewhere around Christmas time somebody phoned me from Montreal to ask if I would be willing to be considered among other candidates. I thought for a moment, and said sure, why not?

I thought this was a good opportunity to go, really an ideal moment, if there ever is an ideal moment, to make a change. How could I live with myself if I didn't take up this challenge.

How do you think student attitudes have changed since the time you first arrived at Erindale? Do they reflect changes in Canadian society?

Oh yeah. Some of them are bellweathers of changes to come. In 1969, it was fairly easy to get into Erindale, quite frankly. Pretty easy to get out, too, because many of the students were put out for academic reasons in those days. But there were a lot of second chances, a lot of chances, a lot of jobs around, and life looked pretty good to people in 1969. After all, the country had known unbroken prosperity for the previous 25 years.

Erindale was, and remains, however, a place where a great majority of the students are first time university attenders. And that's always given them a difference from downtown. In more recent times, it's been tougher to get into Erindale, admission requests have risen, costs have risen, relatively speaking, and we've experienced tough times, in the last 4 or 5 years, even before the recession was officially declared.

Another thing that's changed here, that is very exciting, and stimulating, and a bellweather of things to come, is that we're a much more ethnically, racially, linguistically diverse campus than we used to be. Probably more so than communities as a whole. And we're right up against the social and emotional changes that are affecting and transforming Canada. It's one of the things that I think I take to McGill, that's an experience most people there don't have; they're fixated on the French-English issue. That's only one of the diversities of our country. I'm an optimist about these diversities.

It doesn't take very long, I'm sure, to convince people who aren't optimists, who get themselves really worked up about it. Being here and watching it over the number of years I have, has made me an optimist. I hope I can take some of that optimism to McGill.

SAC all-candidates forum offers little in the way of surprises

by Kevin Sager

At the SAC all-candidates forum held on Wed, Mar 10, the four presidential tickets basically reiterated their campaign slogans, often echoing each other's sentiments.

The proceedings began with Sarah Niles and Jennifer Cardella, calling for "common sense," which Niles said was in "short supply" at SAC. "SAC does not need to move either to the left or the right. It only needs to move forward."

Her running mate, Cardella, stated her view that, "SAC is a corporation...it should be treated as one," adding that the "Orientation fiasco" would not be repeated.

Gareth Spanglett and Rupinder Ahluwalia made bringing the three campuses together their main priority. Ahluwalia stated that one of SAC's dilemmas was that services are often duplicated between the many college councils and SAC. "We need to recognize suburban campuses," he stated. He also added that an independent monitoring group could serve as a solution for SAC's financial problems. Spanglett charged that the University Administration in fact, has a surplus of $17 million. This, he stated, he had discovered through the University's own financial statements.

Now-defunct ticket Andrea Madho and Daniel Awadalla, made "accountability" and a "reasoned approach" their priorities, promising to triple funding to clubs and student societies and to do away with honorariums.

Although Pina Palma was not available for the forum, her running-mate Ali Lila, SAC Business Manager, represented the ticket, stating that Palma and himself were committed to "putting students first". Although he expressed a need to streamline SAC's operations, Ali was determined to perpetuate events and functions students can benefit from, such as more events like Spike Lee's address at Convocation Hall. He also expressed the vital need for fiscal responsibility to ensure SAC's long term financial stability.

All of the candidates expressed a desire to do away with the secrecy surrounding SAC meetings by having fewer in camera (closed) meetings. However, when questioned about the legal implications of this, they all had to agree that there would be certain times when secrecy would be necessary for protection.

SAC Health Plan

For God's sake... SAC it to us no longer!

On The Left With Manfred Sittmann

I used to view student elections as somewhat of a joke. To me it was not much more than the ultimate example of student apathy, a tremendously uninteresting popularity contest if you will. People knew that elections were going on, and quite often we even knew who was running. Oh, the wall-paper of campaign posters ensured that - like if I didn't notice the first million pictures of one candidate, I would suddenly be compelled to vote for them because of the second million.

Not only is it environmentally unfriendly, its annoying as hell. While I may have known who was up for what, like most of you I couldn't care less. Who became SAC, ECSU, or ECARA director of whatever meant about as much to me as who wins Miss Congeniality at a Miss Yukon pageant.

However, lately my apathy is being replaced with quite another feeling. I'm not sure exactly how to define it because while I still don't care who wins, the election itself has been a tad disturbing. I guess the best way to describe it is as follows: Before, student elections were pathetic and stupid. Now they are pathetic, stupid, mean spirited, corrupt, and at times downright ugly.

Allegations of racism?!? In a U of T student election?!? Someone has got to be putting me on. I guess when there are high paying-low impact jobs on the line people at any age will forgo ethics.

What does SAC do anyway? Someone once told me that they lobby on the students behalf regarding tuition hikes. I think maybe there wouldn't be so many hikes if there weren't so many high paying, do nothing jobs available for people looking to pad their resumes.

And what about ECSU? Now I am all for effective government and all that, but here again I am having trouble coming to grips as to why they are here. Is it a vital student necessity to have them go on pleasure cruises and book no-name bands into the pub? Maybe I'm wrong (it's not unthinkable you know) but if I am I am not alone in this thinking. The majority of students I talk to on the subject could care less if all of these positions were wiped out entirely. Some even support that idea because then we wouldn't have to endure all of this election stuff.

My suggestion is that if these positions are so important, and there are "student leaders" so dedicated to helping others why not keep the positions around but on a volunteer basis. I do not think it is unreasonable to theorize that the ferocity level, not to mention the demand, would drop considerably if this were to occur. If this plan were followed what would happen is that the students would save money and only those truly bound to serve others would do so.

I've said it before, and I'll say it again. There are probably a lot of bright, idealistic people at the U of T who would be attracted to a position of some sort on a student government. However, they are all too often repulsed at the scandalous behaviour we see thriving in today's climate. I am referring to the fiasco involving Andrea Madho -the Tonya Harding of student politics- and her dubious literary pursuits.

I am reminded of President Harry S. Truman's observation that when a society's leaders become corrupt and above the law, the citizens who take them as an example will follow suit. I often wonder, when looking back at recent North American history involving public scandals, whether or not the general lawlessness which is increasingly becoming common in this society is due to a disenchantment with established bastions of authority. Are we headed for a total societal decay? Simply take a look at the past generation's scandals.

Take religion, for example. Except for a faithful few, most people (including myself), have lost faith in organized religion due to the various indiscretions involving religious figures. Pedophilic priests, crooked televangelists, and moral majoritarians have so discredited the Christian faith that many people simply have lost all respect for the institution.

Or perhaps you look up to captains of industry. I certainly have nothing against capitalism, but it's hard to look at the outrageous loopholes that big business in this country is privy to without feeling a certain skepticism. Regardless of ideology, greed is never becoming.

As for politics, our generation grew up witnessing Iran-Contra hearings, BCCI investigations, Anita Hill, check-bouncing congressmen, Whitewater, Brian Mulroney's political patronage, Jag Bhaduria, neo-nazis posing as conservatives- the list goes on. Of course, the generations preceding ours weren't short of disgraces either; Watergate, Chappaquiddick, Jack Kennedy's various indiscretions, the blatant graft and corruption that transpired during Truman's presidency- why, you can take it as far back as Caligula's Rome, for that matter.

Which naturally brings us to SAC. I think that with some notable exceptions, student politicians have a rather inflated opinion of their importance, capabilities, and impact on student life. Enamoured of the perquisites of the job, and the thrill of the campaign, it becomes a game, a dress rehearsal for greater contests that lie ahead.

And as with any game, there are those who disregard the rules, and then say, "Who, me??" when they are caught.

Let's target student politics

Environment Canada is probably reporting good weather for the next few days. It's too bad they couldn't give us some predictions on Erindale's political climate. I'd say the humidity is about 100% and the temperature is just a tad hotter than usual (under the collar that is). Politics. No matter how you look at it tends to be either sensational or utterly ridiculous.

Do they actually believe themselves when they say things like "Representing the students ... is the prime directive?" Do you believe them? Let's target the problem and deal with it prima facie. The problem centers around the organization. Do these organizations believe what they purport to be representation? I think not. Let's move closer to the target.

Target: ECSU.

The Erindale College Student Union, what exactly does this mean? Well we know what Erindale College means, and technically the added word of student should mean that this is an organization that represents the students of Erindale College. Etymologically the word union comes from the Latin word "unio" meaning one. So, if we put it all together, Erindale College Student Union should mean an organization that's works for the students as "one" student body. This explanation seems simple, and yet for some reason, ECSU has seem to forgotten what exactly they are supposed to be representing. Then I came to this statement; "I promise to do my best.". What exactly is "one's" best? At least, they have the root meaning of union right.

The idea of ECSU as an organization is good, but when people corrupt it by just not knowing why they want to be part of the organization it makes me ill. What do I mean? Most in ECSU, it would seem, are running for the popularity of the position and not the responsibility. To be responsible is to represent the students, but to be popular is to be on the Price is Right. I have been on ECSU and I did not run to be popular. I wanted to help the students the best way I knew how, and most of my council worked with me to do this. It would seem that these values that were once instilled are slowly disappearing. I wasn't perfect (God knows that), but some are closer than others.

ECSU has a hard time representing students because it is not a representative council (have I talked about this before?). ECSU is a council that performs a function. Actually, the President of ECSU is the official spokesperson of students' concerns and the others kinda just function (I'm not making it up - it's in their constitution). Ultimately though, in a roundabout fashion, ECSU does serve the purpose of representing students (hmmm....).

I encourage you the student to grill your "politicians" and scrutinize many of their redundancies so that you can make an educated decision.

Target: medium II. What's this crap about having two opportunities to run for a position. What do I mean by this? Well, if you run for Editor-in-Chief and lose, you can run for a position on the editorial board. Now isn't that fancy! Why should individuals who lose one vote, try to win another. Is this objective?

The one thing I can commend medium II on (no kissing ass here) is that they are actually taking strides to amend problems that allow the paper to "speak" for the students.

My point in all of this is that we need some reform. We have to be specific. We must set out the proper rules to represent students in the most effective manner. It starts from the root - the constitution, and it must start by being objective.

What a lot of stuff coming up. This SAC election business is ridiculous. We know that another ticket had a hand in writing the anonymous letter used in a scathing article against other candidates but we can't do anything about it. Editor in Chief forum this Wednesday at 1:00. Everyone should attend - it's important to get involved. The rest of the board is the following week. We'll have to come up with suggestions for revamping our election process next year. Start thinking of things for the joke issue. It's only two weeks away now. Miss you M.

Journalistic integrity lacking

Last Wednesday the newspaper ran a front page story which was an example of irresponsible journalism at its finest. Niles Denies Racism Charges the headline screamed in red ink. The article carried on in heavy hitting fashion in the first line: "Charges of racism and connection to the Heritage Front have led to statements of categorical denial from Sarah Niles, a candidate for the SAC Presidential election next week."

It went on to state that "Niles...has become the object of an (sic) scathing letter reportedly distributed to campus groups and media." What the article declined to mention, however, was that the letter was 'received' anonymously. Having a tangible source to verify information is a necessity for a newspaper article. Or it used to be. In this case the newspaper chose a tabloid headline coupled with sensationalistic, vague text to lure readers into believing something utterly false.

Generally speaking, this is deplorable for its lack of journalistic integrity. Add to that the timing, and it is even worse. A student newspaper should be attempting to promote the best interests of the students, especially at SAC election time. Running a story with absolutely no foundation in fact - taking into account the fact that the letter was anonymous - goes against everything a newspaper is supposed to uphold. More specifically speaking, this is deplorable because the whole situation reeks of corruption.

The article stated that the letter was reportedly distributed to campus groups and media. medium II was one of the three newspapers which received a copy of the letter questioning Niles. However, the newspaper had no way of knowing this. When SAC VP Candidate Jennifer Cardella spoke with the newspaper's Associate Editor Julie Rezvani, Cardella was told that copies of the letter were c.c.'ed (carbon copied) to both us and The Varsity. Neither the letter we were faxed nor the one The Varsity received were c.c.'ed so it seems odd that the newspaper would know we were due to receive faxes. DUE TO receive faxes!

the newspaper's running an article based on this letter becomes even more suspect when the time frame is more thoroughly examined. One Erindale student, who wished to remain anonymous, spoke with Rezvani at approximately 1:00 in the afternoon and was told by Rezvani that the newspaper was going ahead with the Heritage Front story. This was approximately 5 1/2 hours before Rezvani attempted to contact Cardella for comment and approximately 6 hours before Rezvani attempted to reach Niles for comment. Cardella returned home at around 7:45 to find the 6:30 message from Rezvani on her answering machine, so she immediately returned the call. Rezvani asked Cardella to comment on the letter, and then when Cardella asked to be read the letter Rezvani couldn't find it. Shinan Govani, who according to Dan Awadalla, SAC VP Candidate on the Madho/Awadalla ticket, is a policy advisor for Madho and Awadalla, happened to be at the newspaper office at the time, and when asked by Rezvani if he could find the letter he couldn't.

Rezvani then provided the gist of the letter to Cardella from memory and requested a comment. When Cardella responded Rezvani asked her to slow down because she was typing directly into the computer because they were going to print in a few minutes. She was typing a story which could ruin a ticket's chances in the election, and which was based on an anonymous letter, without the letter in her possession? Irresponsible journalism doesn't even begin to cover this. What makes this even more suspicious is that The Varsity's fax of this letter arrived at 8:07 pm and our fax came at 8:08 pm. At the time Rezvani was asking Cardella to comment on this letter supposedly sent to the various campus media, the other campus media in question had not even received it.

medium II has subsequently received a fax claiming authorship of the original letter, complete with a name and phone number. Unfortunately the supposed author did not answer our repeated calls, and another student has stated that the person who faxed in claiming responsibility did not in fact write the original letter. Considering the newspaper was unable to verify neither the contents of the letter nor the authorship it seems odd that they would choose to run it as a front page news story. It can only be surmised that the newspaper had a greater part in this than is readily apparent.

Two days prior to receiving the letter SAC VP Candidate Dan Awadalla was in our office discussing the SAC elections with us and he made references to Niles having Heritage Front links through her campaign manager Dan Robertson. Then an anonymous letter was received at the newspaper several hours prior to other campus papers, making similar statements. Rezvani is close friends with Andrea Madho and Govani, so if a letter condemning perhaps the strongest competition for Madho and Awadalla was received Rezvani had an even greater responsibility to treat it carefully.

Press endorsement is often a highly sought after commodity during student elections. If a newspaper decides to offer an endorsement it should be done very carefully. Not only should it take the form of building up the capabilities of the ticket or person the paper supports, it should never manifest itself by denegrating the opponents. The poor journalism displayed in this instance represents a gross mishandling of basic journalistic responsibility. The tactics to tarnish Niles' reputation are usually found in the worst sort of tabloid journalism. Student papers have a unique opportunity to both provide a degree of student leadership and to assist others attempting to improve the quality of student life.

The evidence offered in the article last Wednesday indicates complicity and corruption at both the newspaper level and the candidate level. Printing the article as they did was reprehensible and it can only be hoped that in the coming days justice prevails and the abilities of the very capable Niles/Cardella team aren't overlooked.

False allegations galling

To the Editor,

This is a reply to the "noble" individual who submitted an anonymous letter, signed "Scared of Sarah Vile" to the newspaper on or around Tuesday March 8, 1994. This was to attempt to implicate Sarah Niles (SAC Pres. candidate) to an involvement with the racist Heritage Front Group. I would also like to question the newspaper as to why they would print a story summarizing the above-mentioned anonymous note. Three newspapers received a copy of this letter and the respectable ones, the Medium II and The Varsity chose to take the letter for what it was worth, recycling bin material. Firstly, I would be honoured to speak with the anonymous author and his or her sources that may have conglomerated to attempt to falsely implicate Sarah with racism. As far as I am concerned these sources do not exist, rendering your allegations completely ridiculous and slanderous.

Furthermore, you exhibit no credibility whatsoever, especially since you failed to disclose your name. Your letter stated that Sarah "has a hidden agenda." Who informed you of this secret plan? As an acquaintance of both Jennifer Cardella (SAC VP candidate) and Sarah Niles, I can assure the author and all students that I have witnessed both professionalism and dedication throughout their campaign. Vigilantes like yourself do not deserve the respect, nor the recognition to be heard. You should be ashamed of yourself. If you think that your ridiculous letter, surprisingly accepted by the newspaper has affected the Niles/Cardella campaign, you are largely mistaken. Secondly, the newspaper failed in its duty as a newspaper to report the news. Good journalism means accuracy and research. This subject was in no way researched, rendering it wholly inaccurate. The columnist failed to mention that the letter was anonymous, meaning that anybody with a cause could have written it. This tabloid style of attempted journalism is outrageous. Furthermore, printing slander just days before the election is not only rude but inconsiderate. You, too should be ashamed of yourselves. Running a campaign is difficult enough as it is. No one needs the added stress of having to defend oneself due to false accusations. As a SAC director for 1994/1995 I would never have accepted my position if I knew or had any suspicion that any of my colleagues were even remotely involved with a group such as the neo-nazi Heritage Front. Let's face it someone is aiming to drive Niles and Cardella out of the campaign race. I can assure you (whoever you may be) that you have failed miserably in your plight. I encourage the voters to ignore all the heresay and vote for the most capable and sincere candidates. Sincerely,

Marco Santaguida,
4th year Eco/Pol. Sci., 1994/95
SAC Director.

Voter bothered by early campaigning

Dear Editor:

Today I walked in to the Sidney Smith building, just lookin' for a newspaper to read on my way to the Accounting Society and found myself looking at an advertising pamphlet for Ms. Madho. On the back of this sheet is listed all the supporters of her campaign. While I am not on this sheet this was of my own volition. I was duly informed by a representative of the Madho camp if I would offer my support, and I was given the number of the Campaign Hotline, which advocates support in her favour. Now whether I gave support or not is not the concern of this letter. What is the concern is, is when I was asked. The date being well before the campaign kick-off date of February 28, 1994. Now how can Andrea begin to implicate herself as "accountable" when she clearly violated S.A.C.'s by-laws concerning official elections. I understand if you are wondering why I am so late in expressing my concern; however, the plain fact of the matter is: I did not know that the candidates had an official date on which they could campaign, or that campaigning before this date violated any charter of S.A.C.. Now I know that I was not the only person called before this date. The representative also mentioned that other presidents had been called previous to me; furthermore, Elad Shraga, President of the Economics Course Organization, was asked the question of endorsement for Ms. Madho before Monday February 28, and the question was asked in an erroneous manner. Just out of plain curiosity, while skimming over the names of the "supporters", I noticed that there were no names from her own Course Union, which she is president of, namely the Union of Political Science Students, in support of her. I guess my main worry is that if she violates the charter now, what would she do if she obtained office?

Winston Leung
Accounting Society, President

Accountability the catch word

To the editors,

We are writing to endorse the SAC ticket of Gareth Spanglett and Rupinder Ahluwalia. We are certain that Gareth and Rupinder will provide the honest, accountable and experienced leadership necessary to restore SAC's ability to credibly address issues of importance to students.

Experience sets these candidates apart from the others. In their ongoing involvement in student, Gareth and Rupinder have continually demonstrated their genuine commitment to student concerns.

As ASSU Treasurer, Gareth has been active in debating issues of tuition policy, student assistance, and academic rules and procedures. Furthermore, through his work on Governing Council — as a member of the Academic Board, the UoFT Budget Committee, and the UoFT Academic Policy and Programs Committee — he has struggled to uphold students' interests within an administrative structure often alienating and unreceptive to students.

Rupinder's extensive experience with UoFT student government — as SAC Scarborough Chair, SAC Scarborough Director, SAC External Commission member, SAC Services Commissioner, SAC University Affairs member — exemplifies his commitment to the effective representation of student interests. Furthermore, his involvement with the National Union of Students in Britain affords him a unique and valuable perspective on the student experience.

We believe Gareth and Rupinder have a vision of SAC which will ensure efficiency, accountability, and effectiveness. Gareth and Rupinder will work together with other students at UoFT — including those often marginalised at the suburban campuses — to ensure a quality undergraduate experience for all students.

Uma Sarkar, ASSU President; Julie Drolet, UC Lit External Commissioner; Jim Schneider, UC Alumni; Heather Platt, Trinity IV; Ahmad Muinuddin, UC Lit; Shirin Tashakor, Cultural Commissioner SCSC; Nicole Nolan, Victoria IV.

Honest people still found at Erindale

Dear Editor:

GOOD SAMARITANS STILL EXIST

When I discovered my briefcase missing this afternoon after participating in Program Information Day, my anxiety level mushroomed to the point of near-panic. The briefcase contained not only the usual assortment of files and notes, but also my purse and some airline tickets for my fast-approaching vacation. Thanks so, so much to the kind person who found and returned said briefcase (everything intact) to Campus Police. The sweat has now dried from my brow and I want to let the Erindale community know that good Samaritans still exist!

The dog...I mean the monster ate it

As I made my daily pilgrimage to the South Building a couple of months ago, I was struck with a new facet of Erindale that would change my experience forever. The morning was crisp as the sun began rising from among the clouds. The earth shone from the fresh coat of snow that lay upon the ground.

It was early. The normal flow of buses and cars would not begin for another few hours. There was a silence. I walked slowly, savouring the fresh morning air and feeling the sun's rays on my face. As I passed the Kaneff bus shelter, my eye noticed a movement to my right side. I turned to look over to the pond. Just ice, as I saw through the leafless tress. I thought I had seen something. I continued my slow walk.

There was a loud crack in the ice of the pond. My head turned, going against my better judgment and fear. There was some shapeless form pushing from underneath the slab of ice that had just been split. My jaw dropped to the ground. It hurt. I couldn't see very clearly due to a lack of light. I rubbed my eyes. "What the hell was that?" I thought, as I picked up my jaw from the cold concrete.

My head snapped back quickly. I quickened my pace. Another louder crack. I glanced around me. Not a soul in sight. Where was campus police when you need them? I looked to the pond. From the crack emerged something more gruesome than I had ever seen before. It was black and moved very slowly. Its size astounded me. A shiver went made its way up my leg, up my spinal cord and to my head. There was something in the pond.

I had heard the dark rumours in the Meeting Place and in the wee hours after Pub. I had skeptically laughed it off as B.S. I could not disregard it any more. I had thought Erindale to be much too ordinary and suburban to be home to any aquatic creatures larger than those in the bio labs. I was wrong. I ran. The beast slithered around on the ice, splitting it as it crawled.

I tripped over the mailbox, got up, and ran up the concrete steps into the Building. I knocked feverishly at the Police Bunker window. In my panic, I tried to explain what I had seen to the officer on duty. After removing the sandbag at the entrance of the bunker, we ran outside to the pond. I thought I had lost my mind. I mean, the creature was gone.

The ice where the beast had been was neatly frozen over. I pleaded and explained what I had seen to the officer, but to no avail. After recommending that I make use of Erindale's Psychiatric services, she retreated. But I'm sure of what I saw. Erindale is home to the son/daughter of Lochness.

I have learned separate incidents of others seeing the creature. Never mind that the pond is six feet deep. I have heard from reliable unidentified sources that there exists a very deep hole at the center of the pond where aquatic ghouls, monsters, mermaids and ghost ships hang out. No doubt Admin. and Physical Plant will want to ban the creature from campus property lest it pay its tuition fees.

What the big wigs might not realize is that monsters have rights too. Rumours are flying that an activist group will be created. In the meantime, if you're looking for a good excuse to give your prof to explain why you didn't hand that essay in, you can just say that the Erindale College pond monster had it for breakfast and almost had you for lunch.

Election '94. Will students get SAC-ked again?

Let's reflect on the past four years of presidents, pretenders and plunderers under the Dome. As I write, resigned '93-'94 President Ed de Gale is currently under investigation for appropriation of funds (read kickbacks). In the past year, Ed had commissioners quitting after citing his 'tyrannical tendencies', and his closest company appeared to be corporate czars and criminal lawyers. De Gall. During '92-'93 our esteemed Prez was Farah Jinha, a.k.a. 'Fluffy.' Farah was consistently invisible and her sole recognisable accomplishment was reminding us of her ambition to succeed Jeanne Beker as host of T and A television. Truly an inspiration at $20,000 plus/year. The year of 1991-92 saw Peter Guo, law school wannabee, and fledgling lecherer, denigrate the majority of the campus before finally being convicted of harassing a fellow SACKer. He was later ordered to keep his distance from the Dome. And finally during '90-'91, Charlie Blattberg, future CGA, facilitated the construction of an astronomic debt unsurpassed by any student government in the modern era. Quite a legacy. We should rename the building at Hart House Circle the con-Dome.

This week we elect a new Prez and V.P. to SAC. A pessimist would mutter, "Why bother?" Ah, but this is the nineties. You know, the New World Odour, a 'green' Vice-President in the White House, and a Liberal government in Ottawa practising patronage after ten Tory years of PATRONAGE. Nope, no time for pessimism.

Fortunately, we have four tickets to choose from: however, by Tuesday the refrain may be "and then there were three." The people representing the tickets have some real accomplishments on their I-wanna-be-a-student-leader-for-a-year resumes. Two tickets include Erindale Vice-Prez candidates.

How can we possibly wade through the mire of mixed metaphors, superfluously vacuous slogans and soporific promises of 'spirit boosting', and make an informed decision by election time? All four tickets promise to increase club funding but that is where the similarities end. Who should we choose?

Well, our job may be a little easier than anticipated. In keeping with the SAC tradition some of the tickets have begun to act like the corrupt SAC leaders we have come to know and loathe. As I alluded above one of the tickets will likely be disqualified by Tuesday. The Madho/Awadalla ticket is under investigation by SAC for numerous election improprieties. Sources informed me that, amongst other wrong doings, their Scarborough campaign manager (or, maybe he isn't now!) was caught with Palma posters in hand by a Scarborough student. Ripping rivals posters. Not nice. Perhaps the Madho ticket felt that they had to play catch up. How seriously can we take a ticket that came together only hours before the nomination deadline anyway? The day before nominations closed, Madho was frantically phoning around searching for a suburban sucker, any sucker will do, and finally came upon Dan (I-want-a-dollar) Awadalla.

Suspicious connections between the same ticket and an editor of a certain 'independent' newspaper also exist.

Last week campus media received an anonymous fax linking Niles to the Heritage Front. All other campus media that received the fax slandering Niles choose to investigate it and subsequently ignore it. However, the newspaper chose to run the fabricated non-story displaying its questionable journalistic integrity. The editor's close association with Madho magnifies existing suspicions.

A documented source informed me that two days before slanderous faxes were received by campus media, Dan Awadalla was heard spewing similar false accusations about a Sarah Niles/Heritage Front connection. When questioned yesterday Awadalla claims that he was just relaying information. The pending Madho/Awadalla disqualification will be welcome to avoid continuing the SAC legacy of corruption.

The Niles/Cardella ticket should be commended for their desire to make SAC more accessible and accountable. Over the last year, Sarah Niles was a much needed thorn in the side of SAC as she tried to lift the veil of secrecy put up by the de Gale/Tremblay regime. However, for a ticket that claims to want openness, accountability and communication, their campaign statements are disappointingly vague and lack substance. When our student leaders will be dealing with hundred of thousands of dollars we need specifics, not slogans.

Meanwhile, has anybody seen Pina Palma? Is there an election campaign on? My contacts at Scarborough tell me that Pina Palma is acting as if she has already won. Her failure to appear at the candidates forum at Erindale confirms this. The Palma ticket endorses OUSA. However, the Palma also admits that she "has not read" the OUSA policy papers. Palma claims that OUSA "has already had some important successes in its short existence." She must be referring to the fact that since OUSA started to lobby the government, OSAP grants have been cut, and a model ICLRP programme was rejected by students. If this is Palma's definition of 'success' we will all get SAC-ked should Palma/Lila be elected.

Based on past performance, the Spanglett/Ahluwalia ticket looks the most promising. Gareth Spanglett has a history of looking out for student's interests. The ticket has had a positive presence at all levels and areas of the university community, from Governing Council, to SAC, to the suburban campuses. Spanglett's analysis of the Provost's controversial White Paper exposed the dangers undergraduates at U of T, and especially Erindale, face as the administration 'restructures' and chops undergraduate enrolment. As a member of the U of T budget committee, Spanglett exposed the $178 million the university has made since the start of the decade. Last fall as the administration insisted it had to increase ancillary fees the evidence showed their folly. Spanglett has long been an annoyance to anyone attempting to deceive and thieve from students.

In the questionnaires that the tickets answered for the medium ii only this ticket portrayed a decentralised SAC where all the officers participate and all students have a voice. After this year's debacles, the Spanglett/Ahluwalia ticket would be a welcome change and our best bet to avoid being SAC-ked again.

Hate Literature Alive at Erindale

South Building flyer denounces Muslims as terrorists

For most people, the term hate literature is often associated with material written in detestation of peoples of Jewish descent. It conjures up names such as Ernst Zundel, and more recently, Prof Robert O'Driscoll.

An incident occurred last week much to the surprise and dismay of Muslim students at Erindale College. Flyers were found in the South Building depicting through heinous terms that all Muslims are terrorists who wish to strike fear in the hearts of non-Muslims and practice the art of bomb-making.

As a Muslim, and student of Erindale College, the incident was shocking to say the least. Often it has been the case that swastikas have been discovered on the St. George campus, but an act of sheer hatred such as this has been unheard of at Erindale. Erindale College, with its mosaic of cultures living and working in peace with each other, would be the last place to expect such a deplorable and cowardly act.

The flyer itself took some time and effort. The MSA letterhead was no doubt lifted from one of our leaflets announcing many of our events. It contained a theme, played on the media portrayal of Muslims as home-grown terrorists, and toyed with the notion that Islam can only "spread by the sword".

It is also perceivable that the author has sufficient knowledge of the religion. Last week the Muslim month of Ramadan ended, thereby ending a period of fasting for 30 days from dawn to sunset. It is the holiest month of the Islamic calendar in which the Qur'an was revealed to the prophet Mohammed (peace be upon him) from God.

The most disturbing paragraph in this piece of trash is one entitled "Goals of Allah". Little does our hate-mongering author realize that the title is also very offensive to Christians and Jews, both having received the Word of God. As Muslims, we believe in all the messengers of God—Adam, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus, to name a few (peace be upon all of them). It is the same God we all pray to and believe in—regardless of the name given to Him. Therefore, the author has told everyone what God's real motives are—I wish I had known before.

The authors reference to making all males polyandrous is contradictory. Polyandry is whereby there is more than one husband. Perhaps our myopic friend was referring to the term polygamy. Here, men are re allowed more than one wife, BUT, under very specific conditions the average male cannot meet, due to financial considerations and otherwise. Therefore the author's request for men marrying men sounds like a plea for same sex benefits to me.

It is also evident that the author has knowledge of

O.P.E.C. affairs. The author's request to turn Muslims into crude oil shows that the author wants to see the price of crude drop even further (author probably drives a gas-guzzler) as there are close to one billion Muslims world-wide.

The request to donate 4% of income to the terrorist movement plays on the Islamic theme of "zakaat". It is whereby Muslims donate 2 1/2 % of income to charity, for those can afford to do so after basic living costs are met.

All in all, we can be thankful that the author did not resort to any violent means to get the message across. This time it was only a piece of paper.

It is difficult to understand how the mind of such an individual works. It is sad that during a time when the world has been witness to the massacre of Muslims in Bosnia, and the recent gunning down of innocent worshippers in Hebron, Israel, that the author would add salt to the wounds of the victims. The author obviously does not value the lives of Muslims and sees them as second-class citizens.

Canada is a multi-racial and multi-faith country, a place unlike any other, where peoples from around the world have helped enrich our knowledge of the world around us. Hate literature hurts everyone, not just the targeted group. As Muslims we unconditionally condemn any form of hate literature written against any group, be they Jew, Blacks, Whites, Tamils, or whoever. Hate literature is simply a cowardly act by those who fail at honest, intellectual debate based on fact.

This hate letter leads to yet another question—Who's Next?. The make-up of Erindale College is so rich in diversity, that any group can easily be made a scapegoat to society's problems. Just as politicians ponder over the debate on immigration, perhaps a forum of sorts needs to be opened at Erindale to tell all that we are different, yet we

It is deplorable that any person or group of people would actively propagate hatred towards another person or group under any circumstances. Condemnation of someone's religion is completely unacceptable, and when found in an institute of higher learning it becomes even more frightening. RACISM

In light of the recent distribution of hate literature at Erindale College, U of T.

The Erindale College Student Union offers the following;

RACISM is a disease which many individuals are afflicted with.

RACISM in effect is also an expression of ignorance. It is further disturbing to know that racism exists at an institution of higher learning, such as Erindale!

RACISM can only be stopped when individuals take an active role to prevent the spread of this disease.

RACISM is a crime when those afflicted hurt others and those who know better do nothing to stop it.

RACISM only exists when we allow it to.

PLEASE HELP STOP THE IGNORANCE - LET'S BEAT RACISM TOGETHER

On the banks of the Credit

This feature began to take shape several months ago with a suggestion from the Editor. Keeping with his efforts to maintain an Erindale focus in the Features section, he suggested I undertake an investigation into the original inhabitants of this area, the Mississauga Indians, and what became of them. Although I was intrigued, I was unprepared to embark on a remarkable journey in which I traversed hundreds of miles and thousands of years while encountering the story of the original inhabitants of this land called Turtle Island. First Nations people refer to North America as Turtle Island because its shape resembles the shell of a turtle surrounded by water. The external protective shell and the living creature within are metaphors for the First Nations for respect and relationship with the land.

The Mississauga area, especially the Credit River region, have been home to natives for hundreds of years. In fact, Principal Desmond Morton's residence overlooking the Credit River used to be a favorite fishing and gathering site. Whither the Mississauga today? The last native settlement in the Toronto region was the Mississauga settlement on the banks of the Credit River. Located where the Mississauga Golf and Country Club sits today, a Mississauga community of over 200 individuals lived until 1847.

Presently, there are over 450,000 'status' (596 bands) and 500,000 non-status Indians and people of Métis origin in Canada. Together they represent the fourth largest ethnic group in the country. For thousands of years, southern Ontario was home to several diverse native communities. Unlike our homogenous communities of today — if you wake up in a strange bed in Markham, how can you tell it is not Brampton, or even Richmond, B.C.? — native communities were heterogenous. Each distinct community had its own political system, culture, spiritual practices, economic institutions, territory and language.

The Native Canadian story began tens of thousands of years ago and continues indefinitely. Although the Mississauga were long ago removed from this area, their struggle continues. Across Canada today there remain hundreds of unsettled land claims. Current land claims are an exercise to regain dignity, respect and heritage. Legal decisions regarding outstanding claims will be made in the present but their legitimacy lies in the past.

The Paleo-Indians were the first inhabitants of Southern Ontario. About 12,000 to 10,000 years ago, after the last ice age Paleo hunters could be found along the Thames, Sydenham and Grand Rivers of Southwestern Ontario. Archeologists continue to uncover new sites yearly. Recently a site (The Antrex Site) was discovered at Eglinton and Hurontario in Mississauga. Dig that!

During the past two hundred years there have been numerous permanent settlements in the southern Ontario region. The last 1500 years have seen the presence of the early Ontario Iroquois. Between 500 and 700 AD the east end of Lake Ontario was populated by the Early Pickering. From 200 to 700 AD the Princess Point settlement thrived around the Grand River area. By 1625, the French were influential in the region and the fur trade had begun. At the time of European contact distinct bands, like the Huron, Neutral and Tionontati, (Petun) populated the area.

In pre-contact times, war was neither extensive nor destructive, and was usually fought for commercial or retributive reasons. Following contact, wars were fought for ethnic reasons. Prior to contact, sharing and redistribution of material goods was the norm and practiced. The concept of being was universal to all natives and all physical aspects of nature possessed spirits or souls.

Central to the animist belief system was the notion that the world was a continuum. Unlike Christianity, there was no hierarchical ordering of "[hu]man and beast." Recall that in the Christian belief system the non-human world exists primarily for human exploitation.

The Huron lived southeast of Georgian Bay in the area we now call Huronia. The Huronia economy depended upon agriculture and trade. They were traders of corn, fish, furs and tobacco. The Huron monopolized the trade of their Neutral and Tionontati neighbors and kept them isolated from the French. Partially because of this monopolization, and partially because of long standing feuds in 1651, the Five Nation Iroquois Confederacy attacked, destroyed and dispersed the Huron. The few remaining Huron joined various other bands and today some descendants can be traced to the Wyandot in Oklahoma and the Huron of Lorette in Quebec. The Five Nation Iroquois Confederacy, (which in 1722 became the Six Nations with the addition of the Tuscarora) was made up of the Mohawk, Onondaga, Oneida, Seneca and Cayuga bands, and was located in upper New York state.

The Neutral, or Attiwandaron, coexisted with the Huron inhabiting the north shore of Lake Erie from the Niagara River. The French named them 'Neutral' because the band remained impartial during the wars between the Huron and Iroquois. Hunting, agriculture and trade comprised the Neutral economy. Following the destruction of the Huron, the Iroquois turned their attention to the Neutral. By 1651 the Neutral were destroyed and disbanded. Today, the Neutral are extinct. By 1652 the Petun had also been driven out of Ontario by the Iroquois.

By the late 17th century, the Iroquois had become weakened by disease and violent contact with Europeans. The Mississauga saw an opportunity to move in. The Mississauga that lived on the north shore of Lake Ontario throughout the 18th and first half of the 19th centuries, had migrated south from Lake Superior and the north shore of Lake Huron. The migration process included a 'bloody' five year war ending around 1700. Emerging victorious, the Mississauga pushed the remaining Iroquois out of the more abundant and fertile lake area.

The last native inhabitants of the Mississauga area called themselves Anishinabeg, which meant human beings, or, men par excellence. By comparison the English called the southern Ontario Anishinabeg Ojibwa or Chippewa. The English also named the Ojibwa of the north shore of Lake Ontario the Mississauga. The name Mississauga had been applied generations earlier by the Jesuits to an Algonquian band inhabiting the northwestern shore of Lake Huron. Although few members of the Ontario bands were descendants of Algonquians, the English applied the label. The Eagle clan was the dominant totem of the western Mississauga and they figured the English derived the monicker from the Ojibwa pronunciation of the totem, Ma-se-sau-gee. The tribal territory of the Credit River Mississauga covered the area from present day London to the Niagara River and north at the head of Lake Ontario to the Rouge River (Scarborough).

The first few generations of Mississauga hunted, farmed and traded furs with the French. Following the defeat of the French by the British and then the American Revolutionary War, the area became crowded, competitive and hostile. However, a Royal proclamation in 1763 recognized native title to their lands and forbade the purchase of this land by private individuals. Because of their participation in the colonial war, the Six Nation Confederacy were viciously driven from American territory. In appreciation of the effort of the Confederacy, the British designated land six miles either side of the Grand River from source to mouth, to the Six Nations. However, the impacting settlement of southern Ontario, began in earnest with the influx of the Empire Loyalists. Over the next fifty years, the settlement population mushroomed. Not surprisingly the migration of the Loyalists led to the first abrogation of the Royal proclamation. In an effort to maintain the exchange of European goods they had come to enjoy during the Revolutionary war, the Mississaugas agreed to "surrender" some of their land.

However, the interpretation of the terms varied significantly by both parties and the effects are still being felt today. Living with or as part of the land, is drastically different than living in conflict with the land and attempting to subdue the land. Like all native Americans, the Mississauga's belief in the metaphysic, enabled them to understand the cyclical nature of the physical relationship between humanity and nature. Not surprisingly, the Christian notion of temporal linearity and duality between man and nature engendered a completely different understanding of the "surrender." The two mutually exclusive world views, led the Mississauga (like most native people) to believe that they were merely granting the British tenancy status, and that the Mississauga would be able to continue to "encamp and fish" as they pleased. The British, on the other hand, felt they gained full 'property rights' and eliminated native entitlement to the land. Yesterday's open interpretations are today's open wounds.

The Mississauga had been converted to Christianity by 1825. This contributed to internal divisions during their last years in Mississauga. In January of 1840, a council convened with the Mississauga (Ojibwa) and Six Nations. Unfortunately, their effort to forge a common front to address the government of the day, failed on the second day over a misunderstanding amidst the tenor of long standing hostilities.

By 1847, the Mississauga Credit decided that because of the intrusion of European settlers--over a thirty year period the settler population had grown from 100,000 to 400,000--and declining numbers--many mission workers were recruited from the band--they could no longer survive in the area! One of the reasons offered for the threat to their survival would sound familiar to the Cree of Manitoba, Ontario or Quebec today. According to a journal of the time, because of the "great numbers of mills which have been erected on the river during the last four years, the fishing is destroyed."

Subsequently, with the government posing as real estate agent, and without informing the Mississaugans, a poster appeared throughout Upper Canada. It read, "INDIAN LANDS FOR SALE ... Under the Direction of the Indian Department... at Port Credit on Tuesday, 27th of April, 1847."

Five Mississauga bands from across Upper Canada, at the urging of the Indian Department, considered emigrating to the Bruce Peninsula where two hundred years earlier the Huron had been driven out. However, the band council declared the agricultural potential of this "stony and rocky" area as inadequate. Since the government had already claimed the Mississaugan land, many declared that they would branch out on their own. The fracturing of the band appeared imminent. Fortunately, the Six Nations heard of the plight of the Mississaugas and in a generous gesture similar to one their ancestors had received from the Mississauga, donated a substantial portion of the southwestern corner of the Six Nations reserve. The Mississaugas moved to the "New Credit" in 1847 and continue to live there today.

Last week at Erindale, Carol King of the Mississaugas of the New Credit spoke briefly on their French called them Huron. The French sobriquet was a derivative of hure (meaning boar's head, brute or ruffian!) and was said to have been named after the hairstyle of Huron men. As before, a difference is recognized; however, a superiority is also implied. 'People who speak a slightly different language'? Or, 'ruffian': the same people are labeled from two perspectives.

In a world where we seldom look beyond the label, the power of designating or naming becomes amplified. To wit, over 500 years ago a bumbling explorer came upon the American continent. Thinking he had reached India he mistakenly named the inhabitants Indians. Although factually incorrect, five centuries later the name lives on. The name says nothing about the people. Moreover, when its usage is perpetuated, despite the recognition of the error, it becomes a lie.

Sports teams are fond of using monickers and logos supposedly representative of indigenous people. Often native people voice their discontent over the depictions and the slights involved. As often they and their supporters are dismissed as being 'politically correct.' Leaving aside the absurdity of dismissing their complaints with a vacuous label instead of a logical argument, let's consider a few team names.

Washington Redskins. Atlanta Braves. Edmonton Eskimos. Erindale Warriors. Syracuse Orangemen. Five names, four lies or derogations, and one an exhibition of pride. Washington Redskins? The only 'redskins' were the Beothuks of Newfoundland who painted their bodies with red ochre. By 1800 they were extinct and to my knowledge none ever made it to Washington. Atlanta Braves? The Cherokee braves that were in Georgia were forcibly relocated to the far side of the Mississippi. Warpaint and tomahawk chops? Yeah, right. See 'Warriors' below. Edmonton Eskimos? Inuit, meaning 'people', actually. There are no 'Eskimos.' Erindale Warriors? Not in the last 150 years! Moreover, as can be seen by exploring the history of the Mississauga, and indigenous peoples in general, the frequency of war was a small percentage when compared to the supposedly civilised western world. Prior to European encroachment, war played a minor role in the lives and history of the first nations. Moreover, the lives of native people were/are multidimensional and native communities were/are heterogeneous. Syracuse Orangemen? Nobody complains, really. White anglo-saxon Protestants naming a team after a moment/movement in their past. The protestations are really a result of who is doing the naming, their perspectives, and why they chose the name.

It is appallingly ironic that these monickers are chosen for sports teams because of the fearlessness, bravery and supposed savagery of their namesakes. For instance, consider college football's Florida State Seminoles. There are few Seminoles (meaning, according to the Spanish, 'runaway') living in Florida today. No wonder since just over a century ago, as the Cherokees were being driven across the Mississippi, "the Americans brought in bloodhounds from Cuba to track down the last fugitive Seminole Indians in the swamps and everglades." If Florida State wants to commemorate a defining moment in the state's history while at the same time choosing a monicker that denotes the requisite cold, tough, macho-image-thing that professional sport calls for I have a suggestion. How about the Florida State Massacres?

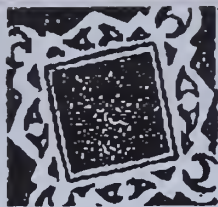

When we purchase something we are instructed to read the labels. Is it not more prudent to read beyond the labels?

situation today. The New Credit have an outstanding land claim and are struggling to revitalize rich culture.

Names; Designation or Derogation?

To name? Or, to be named? It's a question of empowerment. The people the Jesuits went to live amongst and 'convert' in the early 17th century called themselves Wendat (Tahontaenrat) meaning "dwellers in a peninsula." They were referred to by neighboring bands as Attiwandaronk, or, "people who speak a slightly different language". The label Attiwandaronk recognises a difference without imposing a hierarchical judgement. By contrast the

Male Order Brides move over, the Makeshifts are on the make

by Lynn Ross

The Makeshifts walked away with two hundred and fifty dollars Wednesday evening as they claimed top prize in this year's band clash. With a funky beat and tremendous crowd reaction, the decision was unanimous. The key ingredient that the Makeshifts added was fun. The band was having fun, the crowd was having fun, and I even saw a few of the judges having fun. The time has come for The Males Order Brides to step aside and let the Makeshifts rise as Erindale's new house band. As for the other prizes, the decision proved to be much more difficult. The judges deliberated in the back room for nearly half an hour before reaching a final decision.

Much to everyone's amazement, Surreal took second place. The band did have great technical skills; however, I felt that their stage performance was lacking.

The band clash made for an exciting evening, but only one band could place first. The Makeshifts were victorious and had fun doing it. All bands were exceptional and are commended for their work. Photos by James Tyndall

Walnut came in third place, walking away with a fifty dollar prize. The band seemed pleased with this finish and are going to use the money to "buy pails." I suppose they enjoy the simpler things in life.

Fourth place was awarded to Wrench. Happy to place in the top four, Wrench will now be anxiously awaiting the release of their tape at the end of this month.

Other bands that performed Wednesday evening included: David Kiran & the Kickbacks, Temper, Ego and Pendulum. All of the band's that entered this year's clash should be commended on a job well done and good luck to all those who enter next year.

Blue Chips examines ethics and high pressure in amateur sports

by Tamara Wickens

Blue Chips is Nick Nolte's second stint in the sports arena. His last was as the aging wide receiver who left parts of his body scattered across NFL fields in America in North Dallas Forty.

Nolte plays Pete Bell, a college basketball coach who once led his Western University Dolphins to two State championships, but who's now desperate to turn a losing season around. Everyone from the fans, the sports director, the alumni and the press are on Bell's case to make it to the Nationals again. His team, however, is a dedicated group of young men who unfortunately lack the scoring punch of some of the rookie basketball players.

The pressure sends Bell cross-country where he has to jump through hoops to sign up "blue chip" prospects to lead his team back to the winner's circle. The rules of college recruitment, however, prohibit Bell from offering his prospects any money. The coach finds himself pitted against competing scholarship offers that are less than ethical.

Blue Chips recounts Bell's personal dilemma of trying to balance his integrity while attempting to regain his coaching credibility. The film is not about winning and losing; it's about the effort given to pressures and the demands for achievement in college basketball.

Blue Chips' director, William Friedkin is a "blue chip" himself. The screenwriter, Ron Shelton has such movies as White Men Can't Jump and Bull Durham to his credit.

The 'blue chips' themselves, Neon Bordeaux (Shaquille O'Neal of Orlando Magic) and Butch McRae (Anfernee Hardaway of Memphis State) may lack acting talent but they score big on the court.

O'Neal was once a blue chip himself. While at Louisiana State he All-American for two consecutive years. So he knows what it's like.

Blue Chips is an entertaining movie with plenty of basketball savvy but that's the extent of its value.

Blue Chips deals with the ethical implications of rookie recruitment in U.S. Colleges. Nick Nolte stars as coach Pete Bell who gives into the pressure by paying amateur basketball players. Pictured above: Nolte, O'Neal and Hardaway.

Sweet sounds and Etheridge's powerful vocals

by Dave Bullard

Melissa Etheridge played Massey Hall on Friday, March 11th, with special guest opener Matthew Sweet. Admittedly, I was more attracted to the sounds of Matthew Sweet however, seeing Melissa Etheridge proved to be an added bonus.

Matthew Sweet played a forty-five minute set consisting of eleven songs, mostly off of the "Girlfriend" and "Altered Beast" albums. Sweet kicked the show off with "Dinosaur Act" and didn't stop. Other notable songs performed were "The Ugly Truth" and "Evangeline." Sweet responded to the calls of the crowd and finished his set with "Girlfriend." Fans of Matthew Sweet should take note that there is a new CDEP out called "Son of Altered Beast."

Concert Review M. Sweet & M. Etheridge March 11

Nonetheless, Melissa Etheridge won my admiration with her performance and outstanding live vocals. Etheridge kicked off a set that was close to two hours long with "Come To My Window." The set included about twenty-three songs. Etheridge's band is one of the best that I have ever heard. Etheridge played a few songs solo under a lampshade hanging down from the ceiling, including 9 songs from her bar room days.

Many songs off her new album were performed, like "I'm the Only One" and "All American Girl." Etheridge still managed to perform some older songs from earlier in her career like "Bring Me Some Water." I was definitely not expecting Etheridge to play "Maggie May" but thoroughly enjoyed it. I suspected that some of the members of the audience went to see Melissa Etheridge on the basis of her sexual preference, not her music. I hope that I am wrong, as Etheridge is a powerful live musician.

Both Matthew Sweet and Melissa Etheridge announced that they would be coming back to Toronto soon. Sweet would be returning as a headliner, and Etheridge possibly as an opener for Sting. Toronto seems to be a home away from home for both these artists due to the amount of time they perform here. I suggest seeing either or both of them as they are excellent live.

GOVERNING COUNCIL ELECTIONS:
FULL-TIME UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS'

Candidates' Statements

The candidates were invited to submit statements of 100 word or less.

Full-time Undergraduates Arts and Science

Inga Gimelshtein (New)

As SAC Human Right Officer and Director from New College I was responsible for presenting the highly successful show "I Don't Understand Women" during Orientation '93. My service on the Child Care and Personal Safety Committees gave me experience in representing student views to the Administration. I intend to ensure that the concerns of undergraduate students are not ignored. With your support I will continue my service to you as a member of Governing Council.

Deborah Huhte (Scarborough)

I am a full-time Arts and Science undergraduate. If elected, I will aggressively represent the concerns of all undergraduates. This is an essential mandate that must be exercised and I intend to be that Voice on the Governing Council for all undergraduates. I have the experience and desire to influence the Governing Council to make decisions which are in the best interests of undergraduates. They may call me at (416) 863-1221 with their concerns.

Daniel B. Midvidy (UC)

Due to space limitations, I will simply list the program I wish to initiate.

- 1) A comprehensive Student Bill of Rights
- 2) Student Trouble Shooting Guide in Course Calendar, i.e., a list of formal remedies to various student problems such as poor professors.
- 3) Bi-monthly class Professor evaluation, WITH FACULTY FOLLOW-UP.
- 4) Monthly U of T newsletter from the President mailed to every U of T student.

Andy Armstrong Tung (St. Michael's)

To those that don't know me, and to those who are not satisfied with the present situation in our University, I represent an element of change. Perhaps one situation that has sincerely motivated me is the predicted tuition hikes. I am aware that I can't change the world-let alone an entire University Budget-but I am here to give it my best shot! I represent change and I want to represent you-the students. If you'll give me the opportunity, I promise I will grasp it.

Full-time Undergraduates-Professional Faculties

Raphael (Rafi) Kertesz (Law)

I am a second year law student and I am interested in representing all the students in the undergraduate professional faculties. I am currently a member of the Student's Law Society and therefore I am aware of the Many concerns facing students and the issues that need to be addressed. I will make every effort to work as hard as possible to represent you and the issues students care about to the very best of my ability. I have never been satisfied being a part of the silent majority; exercise your vote and allow me to be your voice.

Shawn Langer (Medicine)

Students today are being asked to shoulder an increasing proportion of the financial burden of University education. I believe it is important to augment the student representation to ensure the University is accountable to the students. My goals are to increase student representation and ensure that issues are addressed.

Melanie Smith (Engineering)

Hi! I'm a third year electrical engineering student. In 1991-92, I was a student governor and I want the opportunity to be on the Governing Council again. The Governing Council is composed of 50 members-including 8 students. I am seeking one of two seats to represent undergraduate, full-time, professional faculty students. I have been extremely active in extra-curricular activities here at the University of Toronto. Thank you for taking the time to read this (brief) statement.

Full-time for Governing Council election purposes is defined as 4 or more full-course equivalents over any two terms.

Innertube Waterpolo team head into feisty finals

by Tamara Wickens

This past Monday the women's Innertube Waterpolo team faced their nemesis, St. Hilda's, in the semi-final match, beating them 10-5.

Considering there has been an intense rivalry between these two teams spanning two years, both teams knew it would not be a romping. Both started off relatively sportsmanlike, but the game quickly turned into a "cat-fight" on water as St. Hilda's typically complained about the aggressive playing style of Erindale. The game was a series of traded goals between both teams but in the second half, Erindale came on with a vengeance as Alison Wood went on a scoring rampage, earning 5 of Erindale's goals.

Standing in for Kim Applin was Kelley Kirk who illustrated that you can score from just about anywhere, if you try. Kirk scored a brilliant goal from half after the ball rolled off Hilda's netminder and into the net. Also scoring for Erindale were Karen Saunders and Esther Levesque in a stellar performance in which Erindale had no subs.

Excellent performances were turned in by Emily Pilon, Jenn Peter and Lara Dyke, adding another notch to Erindale's belt. The Ladies were now on their way to their second Innertube Waterpolo final against the second seed, St. Mike's squad the following Wednesday.

In the first two-game final the ladies headed in with a full bench and much confidence. The match began evenly but Erindale was not playing as well as they did the night prior. Having beaten the top-seeded St Hilda's Erindale felt confident in their ability to send SMC packing but the result was the opposite. SMC sent Erindale packing, winning 5-3. This score means that SMC is two points up going into the second final on Monday night. Erindale needs to make up for lost time if they hope to become champions again. Scoring in this match were Tamara Wickens, Alison Wood and Karen Saunders.

Frolicking in the water prior to their match against SMC, Erindale's Innertubers are 2 points behind.

Pondscum finish season with an impressive 7-3 win over Pharmacy

by Gabe Galambos

The men's Waterpolo team finished its regular season with a relatively impressive win over Pharmacy/Know

.Lapses in defensive play accounted for all of their opponents goals, but still could not match Pondscum's strong offensive play.

Jason Ovsenny and Pascal Tyrrell put forth strong games with two goals apiece. Alison Wood, Rekkha Trembath and Gabe Galambos also managed to net goals.

With this win Erindale winds their season up with a 5-1 record earning them second place in the overall standings. Pondscum play Engineering in its first semi-final match at 7:45 on Monday night. A win would send them to the finals for a second year in a row and will play the winner of the semi final between MEDS and PHARM.

Jon Wawrow
In a intense match against CCCP, this Devil'd Egg came back for the victory. Jon was an integral part of this comeback.

Martin Borean
Injured as he was, Martin played this week for the Charlie's Angels. He scored 3 goals and 1 assist on a sprained ankle.

Winners will receive a gift certificate for a free dinner for two from McGinnis Landing. They can be picked up at the medium II each Friday.

And they're off: ball hockey heads into playoffs

by Kais Aziz, Mike Prencipe and Tamara Wickens

Chainmen 10 President's Choice 1

It appeared to be a scrimmage rather than a playoff game as the Chainmen easily ousted PC out of the playoffs with a 10-1 victory. Dave Kovacs lead the way with 1 goal and 3 assists. While every player besides goalie Alex Vaccari managed to get on the scoreboard. The victory places the Chainmen with a tough 2 game playoff against DDWU next week.

Charlie's Angels 4 Unknowns 3

There is no doubt who the MVP for Charlie's Angels will be this year. Originally a scratch for this game with a sprained ankle, forward Martin Borean came off the bench to score 3 goals to lead the Angels to a 4-3 squeaker over the Unknowns. Borean also added an assist on Harpreet Singh's game winner with only 48 seconds left in the game. The win secures the Angels playoff hopes. While the Unknowns, despite playing their best game of the year, will miss the playoffs for the second year in a row.

Mrs Buttafuoco 12 Punishers 1

The Punisher's were once again the Punished, as Mrs B.

crushed them 12-1 to end off another disappointing season. This game was a chance for certain players on Mrs Buttafuoco to pad up their scoring stats, as they were not given much competition. Brian Henderson lead the way with 5 points, while Rob Guzzo and Todd Doering added 4 points each. Mrs Buttafuoco finishes up 2nd in their division, setting up an interesting playoff match up against the Firefighters.

Sons of Jerrol 7 Del Lords 3

Norm Panou made his debut between the pipes for Lis Lords and he was not impressive at all. If you count entertainment value for anything then Norm was brilliant with his imitations of Ron Hextall in his glory years as a Flyer. Others might say that Norm demoralized his team after they fought back hard to overcome an early 3-0 lead to eventually tie the game. The hard fought win by Sons of Jerrol ended up their season position in fifth place. The effort by Sons of Jerrol was noteworthy, but is it enough to go somewhere in the playoffs especially in a first round meeting with the Russians (Barring any review board decisions against CCCP).

tory in a fast-paced match-up against Cold Filtered. This game was a one game sudden death playoff, and the determination of both squads showed on the floor. Cold Filtered surprised DDWU with two unanswered goals by Matt Perrotta and Alan Marasovic in the first half to go up 2-0. Paul Paradine answered for DDWU to bring the game to 2-1, and with only 30 seconds left in the half, Frank Barrese tied the game at 2 to provide the fuel for an exciting second half. DDWU kept their momentum going and eventually overpowered Cold Filtered offensively and defensively thanks to some superb goaltending by Dylan Riendeau. Matt Barrese had the hattrick for DDWU, while Matt Perrotta notched a similar feat for Cold Filtered. Congratulations to both teams for an exciting start to the Erindale Ball Hockey Playoffs.

Charlie's Angels 5 Unknowns 3

Charlie's Angels barely managed this win over the Unknowns which puts them into the playoffs. Scoring for the Angels was Martin Borean on a sprained ankle.

Playoffs begin in men's ball hockey action this week.

their first playoff match. The Men didn't make it easy for BBC, however, as they played a tough game and kept the score close in the first half. As the second period began, BBC maintained a 2-1 lead which they managed to build to a 4-2 victory thanks to 2 goals from Clayton Kollee and a single from defenseman Rob Braine. Rich Amaral and John Patrick kept the game close for All the President's Men.

Devilled Eggs 4 CCCP3

In an exciting game where refereeing made all the difference, Darayus Kanga humbly scored the first two goals for CCCP. The Eggs remained scoreless for the first half. Umesh Dandiker scored in the second half, making the score 3-0 for CCCP. Brett Eysers, Jon Wawrow, Mike Vidas and Jeff Floyd scored in the last 6 minutes of play to give the Eggs well-earned victory.

Final four women's teams head to semis

by Tamara Wickens

The women's playoffs got underway this week with one minor surprise. Best In the World faced off against the Little Rascals which made for an exciting playoff match. BITW won by two goals in an intense shootout.

The second game was between Squared and Buried and Black Diamonds. Try as they might the Diamonds could not get it together to overcome the S&B squad. Squared and Buried won 3-1.

The Killer Bunnies romped all over the Church Ladies in a 10-1 blowout. Kirsti Haaka was the star with 5 goals. Carol Jamieson scored CL's only goals.

In the final game the Funky Divas upset the highly favoured Never Too Trashed squad. It was a case of pulling the goalie at the wrong time, and not letting the team know. The game was tied at 3-all and Mandeep Mukkar was pulled from the net. Less than 30 seconds later Cuc Duong scored for the Divas and she scored again a minute later.

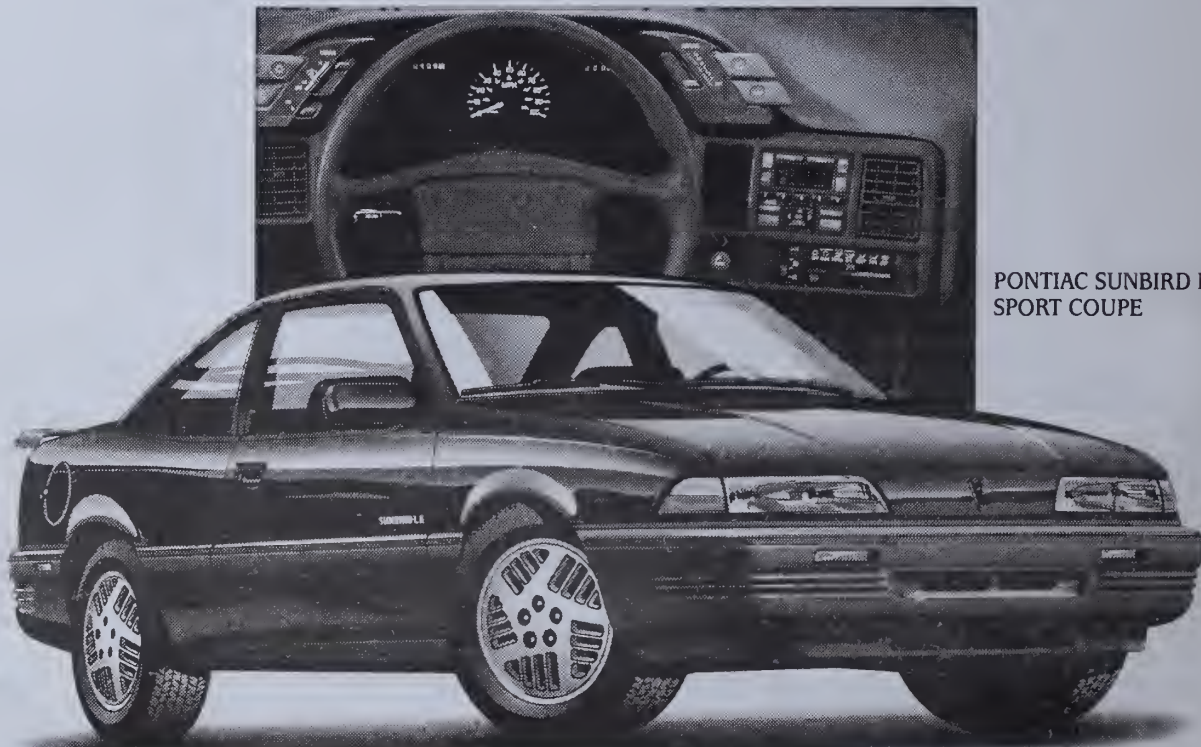

The final four will face off this week in the semi-finals. Look for BITW, Squared and Buried, Funky Divas and the Killer Bunnies to give you some exciting women's ball hockey. Admission is $1 per day.

Squared and Buried duked it out with Black Diamonds winning 3-1.

Campaign schmoozing is for the birds

Constitutional questions and schmoozing seem to abound during election time. Everyone wants to make sure everyone is

Revelations

by Tamara Wickens

following the rules but no one wants to look into their own backyards. The last two weeks, the medium II has spent considerable cover space delving into the constitutions of both ECSU and ECARA. In the first case, ECSU had not advertised the positions that were opened until one week prior to the close of nominations. This led to the obvious conclusion that students who may want to run, did not know the nominations were closing just as they had learned of them. This was a direct contradiction to their constitutional guidelines.

In the second case, ECARA had had 6 of 10 acclamations. The people that were acclaimed were a majority of incumbents who knew what the jobs were and were capable of doing it. However, even if these people are qualified, it seemed as if their position was not earned. There was no competition; it seemed too easy. This conclusion however, was deemed by some as an evasion of the question that the medium II has no constitutional dilemmas plaguing them. Surely, we are not ignorant, that is why we have created a system whereby the constitution can be amended. Just like everybody else.

Why is it that people would rather adopt an attitude of blame rather than create some solutions for change?

Acclamations are nothing to be proud of. Last year alone, the majority of the medium II staff was acclaimed. These people were then subjected to an accept/reject vote. In one case the vote was 7-5 in favour of reinstating the incumbent. This sent a clear message to the incumbent that the staff wanted change.

No student, least of all the student press, should be above the law, so-to-speak. Each student society should strive to set the example. It is a sign of good government when more than one person runs for a position. ECSU, ECARA and the medium II should endeavour to amend their constitutions to resolve the discrepancies in their election processes.

Let us now move on to the issue of election campaign schmoozing. In the last two weeks I am sure all of us have had it up to here with this campaign bull. Everyone thinks they have the solutions. So-and-so is better than so-and-so.

Some people believe that what they do during campaign time should be what counts. I believe something different. What have they done all year? Does playing ball hockey mean you can balance the athletic department's budget? Does being a prefect in high school mean that you can meet the demands you will face from various clubs? The list of questions is endless. But where are the answers?

What makes a student leader a good one? Is it one who points the finger? The one who provides the light at the end of the tunnel?

I would most likely spend my vote on the candidate who most likely exemplifies those qualities I admire: Honesty, integrity, dedication, sincerity.

In the next two weeks every student of every age will run into some serious candidates and those who are looking to pad their resumé's, as well as those who don't care about the students at all. Everyone should be aware of what their options are and don't waste your vote.

The acclamations of the past, which exist in this election, especially for ECARA are a sign that sometimes democracy creates a popularity contest. Sometimes the best man/woman for the job is not always elected. And if the best isn't elected that person's efforts will shine through in their activities prior to the election.

Campaigns begat schmoozing. With schmoozing will eventually come the end of the election. In the end the electorate, if their vote was an educated one, will rest assured that they made the right choice. Those who earn or deserve the position will not stop working hard after they've won or not. They will keep working for the student's causes.

Student organizations should be at the mercy of every student whether it be EPUS, ECARA, ECSU or even us at the medium II. When looking at the candidates consider their qualities and their track record seriously. It is important that we choose our leaders carefully as they hold the key to our futures, as well as our money.

Sittmann airs his laundry..again

Recently, this column has been the site of many debates and controversial topics. The articles have been well structured, balanced and long, thought out viewpoints on the issues facing hockey fans today. It has been a while since I have allowed myself to indulge in a series of unrelated rantings. I think that you can see where I am headed with this.

Quite a lot has happened in the past few weeks, and there are moves that need to be analyzed, people that need to be made fun of, old grudges that need to be rehashed, and to tell you the truth I can't hold off any longer. So what follows is, well, you'll see...

How can the Winnipeg Jets and the L.A. Kings have so much talent and yet still be losing? Barry Melrose and John Paddock will have a lot of time to think about that when they are both fired this off season.....Sergei Federov is only two points behind Gretzky for the scoring race. Dare I dream that the Grate One chokes in the stretch and loses? Life would be too sweet if that were coupled with L.A. not making the playoffs. Hap - py - Days - are here again - da - da - da - da.....Who else among you laughed hysterically when those attendants dropped the stretcher carrying Mike Modano? I was laughing so hard I thought that I would need a doctor.....Can someone explain to me exactly why Doug Risebrough would make another multi-player swap? Has he not learned his lesson? While dumping Suter and friends for nobody in particular won't be as infamous as the "other" trade, it weakens their Cup chances.....N.H.L. justice: Dale Hunter gets 21 games for nudging Pierre Turgeon after the play. Tony Granato gets 15 for attempting to bash Neil Wilkenson's head in with his stick. That sends out an interesting message. If you want to put someone out of the game, use your stick and the punishment won't be as severe.....In the past year the Blues have added Phil Housely, Steve Dushesne, Petr Nedved, Peter Stasny and to me they are no better now than they ever were. Prediction: They get no further than the second round.....Why would Dallas Drake even pretend that he was tough enough to mix it up with Wendel Clark? What was he thinking? Why was there no third man in?.....The best punch of the year? Eric Lindros on Eric Desjardins who made the mistake of being the first one in to stick up for goalie Pat Roy.....Most surprising punches of the year? The million or so that Grant Jennings landed on Tie Domi.....When Brett Hull was talking to the press about Petr Nedved he claimed that it was nice to finally be able to play with a talented center. My question is was Craig Janney sitting across from him going: "Um...Hel-lo"?.....Dave Ellet? A million dollars? Dave Ellett?????.....Don Cherry is right. Glen Sather is a hypocrite. But then again, all of the chief spokesmen against fighting tend to be hypocrites. McNall, Eisner, Gretzky (this week), Sather, Linden etc.....

ECARA Council Elections 1994

ACCLAIMED POSITIONS

Don Malcolmson
President

I am running for the position of ECARA president. I have been on ECARA council for 2 years as the Men's Interfaculty Representative and understand the importance of running an effective council that provides competitive athletic programs as well as recreational activities that are available to all students. I believe that the council must work as a team, so both the athletics and the recreation programs will run smoothly and effectively. Having coached hockey for 3 years at Erindale, I understand the importance of team work and intend to incorporate this into ECARA. All members on council should be knowledgeable about all activities run by the council or at least have information that is easily accessible. Having worked on council for 2 years I am familiar with all aspects of the ECARA programs. I intend to be open to all suggestions or comments from students.

Don Malcolmson

Kathleen McDermott
Women's Interfaculty Representative

As the current Women's Interfaculty Representative, I am confident that I can make a big contribution and have a positive effect not only on the Women's program, but on all programs offered by ECARA and Athletics. This year I was also the Chair of the Women's Intramural Sports Committee (WISC). This enabled me to have a strong and effective voice on the downtown campus in terms of successfully serving the interests of Erindale. I will be able to bring all of the valuable experience as this year's Women's Interfaculty Representative to the position next year, as well as ECARA council. Basically what I'm saying, is that I think I'll do a damn fine job. The Brunie? Oh, you'll have to ask Emily! Hey Peter! Wanna buy some almonds?

Kathleen McDermott

Emily Pilon
Co-ed Interfaculty Representative

Hi there, my name is Emily. It looks like the time is once again upon you to line up and vote for student reps. Some of you may not know me but...I am once again running for Co-ed Interfaculty Rep. As I already know my position, I think I'd continue doing a bang-up job.

Emily Pilon

I have been participating in both intramural and interfaculty sports for 4 years. I love sports (ask anyone who's seen me doing boat races in the pub), and believe in a well rounded social life.

I feel I have developed effective leadership skills through working in the Den (Sorry, I have to kick you out of the pool room but we do close at 10 and I have a life and as a frosh leader it's on the corner of Bloor and Brunswick-go to Bloor and turn left).

Brett Evers
Women's Intramural Representative

Presently as Men's Intramural Representative I have been enlightened to the excellent athletic program at Erindale.

As women's intramural representative, I hope to increase women's participation in intramurals and promote skill development in ball hockey by holding player improvement clinics. This will increase women's skill level and knowledge of the sport which will only increase the women's league and make everyone's school year more enjoyable. Thank you!

Brett Evers

Jon Hart
Men's Intramural Representative

As an active participant in Erindale Sports, Ball Hockey Commissioner for 2 years and an avid watcher of sportslines, I believe I would be best suited to be your Men's Intramural Representative.

Jonathan Hart

My involvement as Ball Hockey Commissioner has made me familiar with ECARA's functions. As Men's Intramural Rep, I would work to improve the quality of sports at Erindale, and ensure that all Intramural sports are running smoothly and equally.

Gabe Galambos
Men's Interfaculty Representative

As a 3rd year student in Sciences I will undoubtedly be here for a few years to follow and feel that I have gained the needed experience to fulfill the position of Men's Interfaculty Rep. I believe that the athletics program is here for all to use, and would like to see more people take advantage of it. In the last three years I have involved myself at the intramural, interfaculty and Varsity levels. I have been an intramural commissioner and a coach at the interfaculty level.

Public Relations and Special Projects

Kirstin Nash

The Public Relations and Special Projects Representative for ECARA is responsible for things such as obtaining sponsorship, developing and maintaining public relations on and off campus, advertising and coordinating special projects. These duties require someone who is willing to work hard to achieve and provide as much as possible for Erindale students. Whether it be through organizing more special events to increase involvement, or perhaps by sponsorship and promotions that offer some benefit. Whatever the method, this person must devote their time and effort to achieving all they can for the benefit of Erindale students. It is, after all the students who support ECARA, it is therefore their right to receive as much as possible in return. Vote for the person who will be willing to work to your benefit.

Steve Knowles

Public Relations and Special Projects

Steve Knowles

Yes guy! Let's get right to the rumble because the position for Promotions and Special Events is up for grabs. For the last two years I have been actively involved in athletics at Erindale, competing in various sports including ice and ball hockey, touch football as well as golf. I believe this will provide tremendous advantage for me as a representative on the 1994-95 ECARA staff. If elected I can't promise any miracles but only that I'll take on this responsibility with exceptional promotional service and do my best to provide the student body of Erindale College with exceptional promotional service. As Jimmy Johnson would say, "If you're gonna talk the talk, you'd better walk the walk."

V. P. Finance

Jeff Floyd

Vice-President Finance

Jeff Floyd

I am a fourth year commerce student who could not pass up on the valuable leadership opportunity that this job entails. I have been actively involved in athletics throughout my years at Erindale, participating in various interfaculty and intramural sports. During this period, I have dealt with ECARA on numerous occasions, each time gaining valuable insight into how the athletic council operates.

A background in commerce and athletics teamed with a strong commitment to the ECARA council makes me an ideal candidate for the position of Vice-President Finance.

Vice President Administration Candidates

Kendra Rawlings

Vice President Administration

Kendra Rawlings

As my position with Kim Campbell's cabinet has been terminated, I feel my credentials best prepare me for V.P. Admin. Having had the opportunity to work with and provide positive leadership to numerous athletic organizations, I am fully aware of my duties and prepared to tackle them head on.

I am so confident in my abilities that I will keep the rest of ECARA council in line and sober.

Tracey Canney

Vice President Administration

Tracey Canney

What kind of person does the Erindale Student Body need to represent them as V.P. Admin.

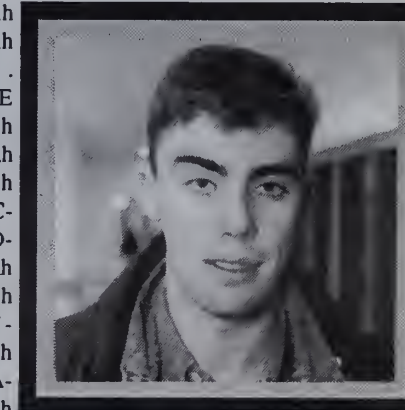

I have the answer to that question!!! This person would not only be an active participant in Erindale Athletics, but also have administrative experience as an executive member of their high school student council and as leader of a service quality team at work. They also would have to be a friendly outgoing person who is easy to approach. This person would be me. If you want to ensure the best representation of the Student Body in the area of Athletics, remember to vote TRACY CANNEY for V.P.. ADMINISTRATION!
